State Ethics Agency Appoints New Chief of Enforcement

The Fair Political Practices Commission, the independent state agency charged with investigating violations of campaign finance laws, today announced the appointment of Kourtney Vaccaro as the new chief of the commission's enforcement division.

"Kourtney's leadership of our enforcement division has assured the fair and impartial application of law," said FPPC Chairman Ross Johnson. "She has done a superb job as Acting Chief and I know this will continue as she takes on her new role."

Vaccaro has been the agency's Acting Chief of Enforcement since March and previously served as the division's Assistant Chief.
